RED GOLD, a 55-minute documentary film about the PROPOSED PEBBLE MINE project. The film received top honors at the May 2008 Mountain Film Festival in Telluride, Colo. The filmmakers spent 68 days in Bristol Bay gathering footage for the film and interviewing those for and against the mine. They followed the salmon, moving from the tidal waters to the spawning grounds, and captured an intimate picture of the people involved-Alaska Natives who depend on area fish and wildlife for subsistence, commercial fishing families who make their living here, sport fishing lovers who travel here to catch world-record trout, and Pebble mining representatives who want to build North America's largest gold and copper mine. Their goal was to present all sides of the Pebble story, and the result is a beautifully filmed story that should be seen by all Alaskans. Red Gold is as much a celebration of salmon and the people of Bristol Bay as it is about the Pebble mine.
